Cutting-Edge Education,
Tailored to You

Today's job market is looking for young professionals who are wise enough to convert their passions into not one but several intersecting disciplines.

Cultivating these interests can take students on fantastic adventures. With the right encouragement, opera singers might dive headfirst into acting and avant-garde compositions, for example. Aspiring filmmakers may embrace video game production while championing the virtue of substance over spectacle. And satirists may find themselves at the center of breakthrough websites built from the ground up.

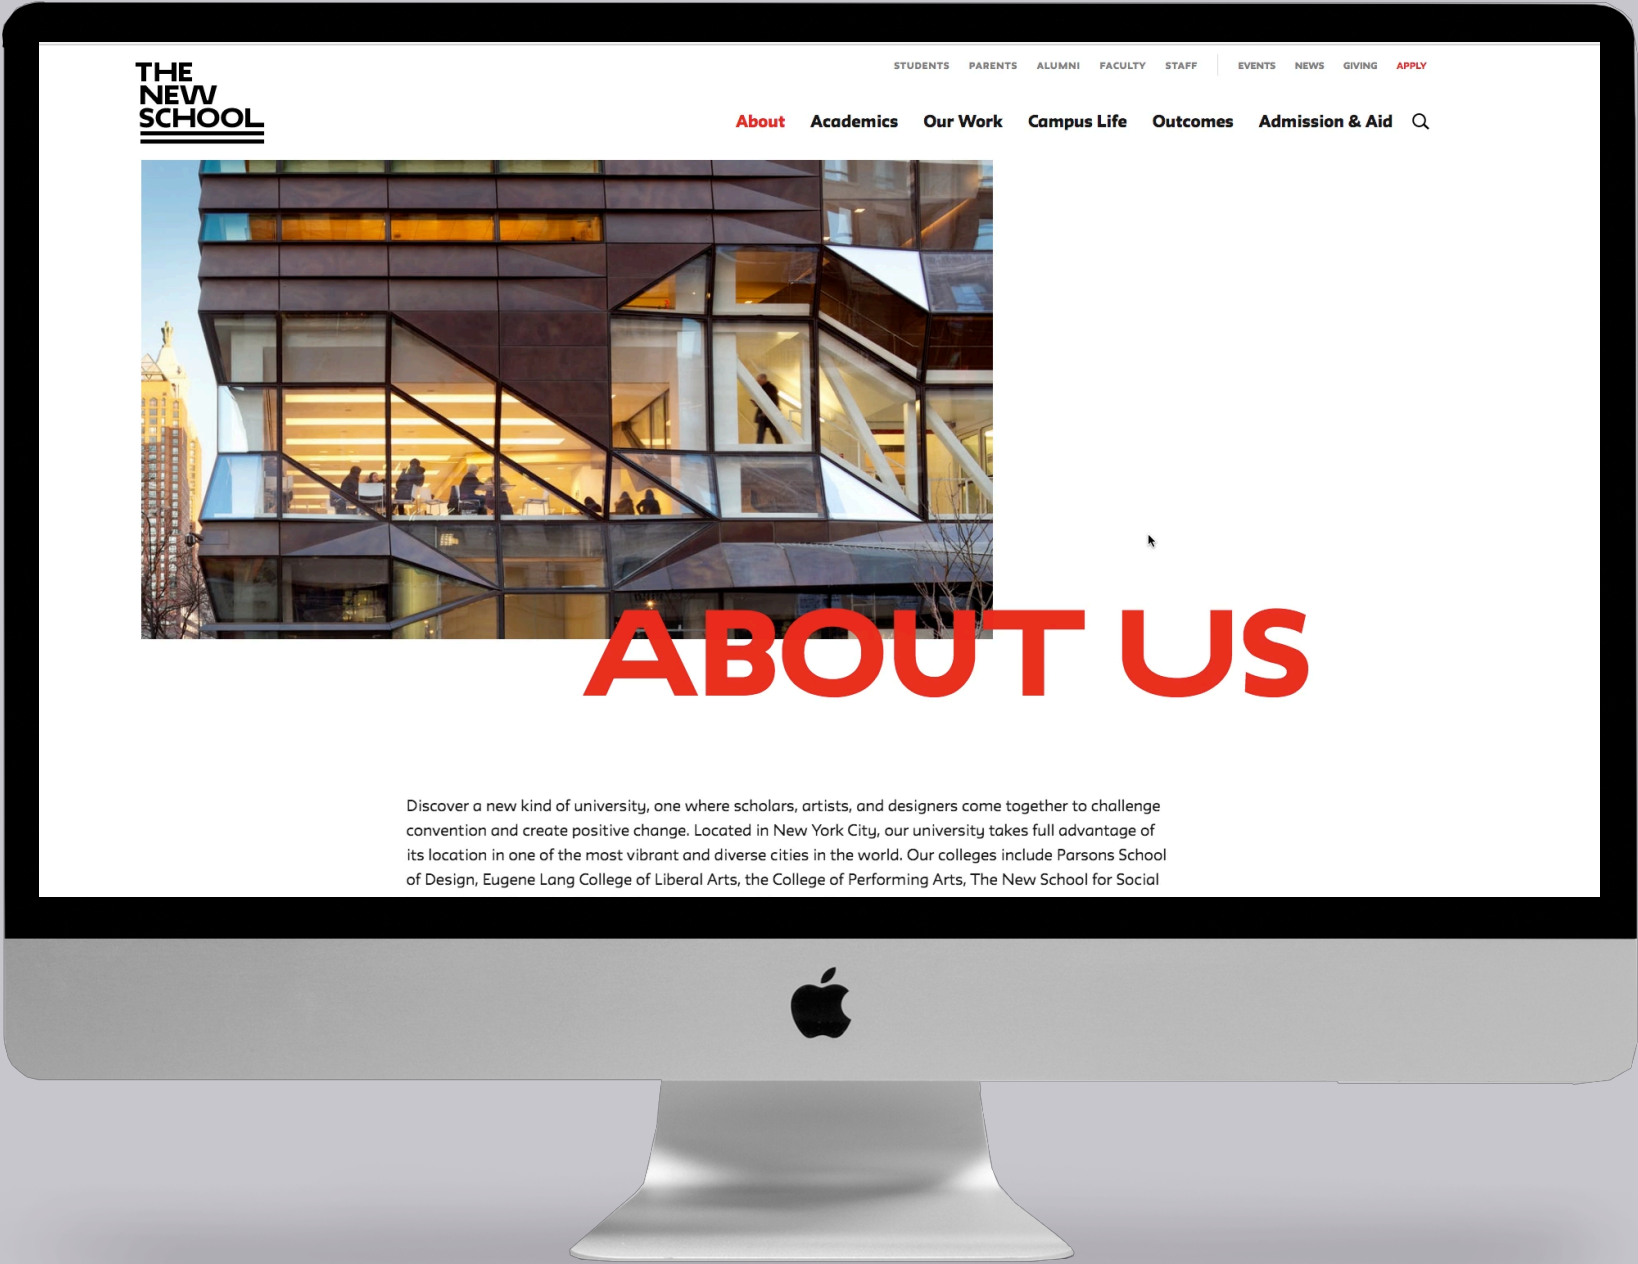

The future is custom-made — and there's a university that specializes in it.

With its five connected colleges spanning a diverse range of concentrations, The New School's approach to education is unlike that of any other college. Rather than locking students into a set course of study, The New School encourages them to pursue their passions across disciplines to pave an educational path that's entirely unique to them and leads to unexpected places.

We caught up with five of these innovative scholars to find out more about their extraordinary journeys and the university that inspired them all.
