Ideally, the Expanded Titles are used in conjunction with portraiture, centered and framed (Be mindful not to cover eyes or mouths.) Of course, this is a living, breathing document for a very new brand. As we move forward, we should remain open to alternate executions of the Expanded Titles.

HALFTONE PHOTOGRAPHY

We use this approach to photography to simultaneously offer contemporary perspective and foundational legacy. May be used with Yale Law School Gold overlay.

Yes, Colleges Favor Some Rich Kids. It's Just Math. — A Commentary by Stephen L. Carter '79

The Washington Post

For nearly 200 years, a Yale Law School education has served as an all-purpose thinking degree, training students to lead in a remarkable range of sectors. Now the school is building upon its storied history to empower the next generation of mission-driven leaders with the launch of The Joseph C. Tsai Leadership Program at Yale Law School.

"Yale Law School has always been imbued with a restless spirit, and change is built into our institutional DNA. The Tsai Leadership Program enables us to preserve our core educational model while building a curriculum for the next century," said Heather K. Gerken, Dean and Sol & Lillian Goldman Professor of Law at Yale Law School. "Amid a devastating pandemic, with vitally important issues like racial inequality and climate change demanding urgent action, The Tsai Leadership Program aims to equip every student with the skills required to address the most vexing global challenges. By lighting up the many career paths available to our students and connecting them to our incredible alumni community, we will help ensure a level playing field for every member of our extraordinarily diverse student body, meeting all of our students where they are, and getting them to where they want to be."

The Tsai Leadership Program opens a new chapter for the institution by bringing together leading experts to prepare students for traditional legal practice and the many nontraditional paths that Yale Law School graduates pursue. The Program also provides support to build new courses, ensuring Yale Law students are numerate as well as literate, savvy about technological change, and deeply steeped in ethics. Coursework spans accounting, corporate finance, statistics, ethics, and emerging issues related to technological change, big data, and globalization. Students hone professional skills through specialized intensives and workshops. They also benefit from mentors-in-residence to advise on the many avenues available to graduates of Yale Law School. Curricular and extracurricular programming combine to enhance the school's foundational curriculum and career assistance resources, supporting students' pursuit of legal careers as well as nontraditional careers in the public and private sector.

What You Need to Know

- The new Tsai Leadership Program at Yale Law School will provide students opportunities for courses in accounting, corporate finance, statistics, ethics and more.
- The school established the program through a partnership with alumni.
- The program's courses and opportunities will be open to all Yale Law students, whether they pursue traditional legal careers or take a nontraditional path.

Yale Law School began a new chapter for the institution Nov. 3 with the opening of its Tsai Leadership Program, which aims to prepare students for both traditional legal practice and nontraditional career paths.

The program establishes new courses and opportunities for professional development. Coursework in the program includes accounting, corporate finance, statistics, ethics and emerging issues related to technological change, Big Data and globalization.

"The Tsai Leadership Program will help us build on our best traditions even as we reinvent them in order to train every student for their last job, not just their first," Yale Law School Dean Heather K. Gerken said in a statement. "We hope it will support a new generation of changemakers, equipping them to meet the challenges to come while carrying forward the highest ideals of the law school."

The idea for the program came from Gerken's travels across the country in the first year of her deanship
