YOU ARE

So is everyone in your community. That's why we work to turn numbers into promise, and tomorrow into a better day.

GOODNESS LEADS, GREATNESS FOLLOWS

A lot of colleges talk about changing the world; about big innovations that change the course of history. At Temple College of Public Health, we have slightly different—yet equally important—goals. We believe that before looking forward and writing the future, we first have to look at each other; look at each member of society and make sure they are on the right path. We have to come together as different disciplines and ask how we can build better tomorrows for everyone.

We are only as good as the stories that surround us. You can help us write the next chapters.

PUBLIC MADE INDIVIDUAL

Negative statistics often feel overwhelming—
the percentage of children who don't get enough exercise, the number of adults who refuse to believe the science behind vaccines, the opioid epidemic that creeps closer and closer to home.

TEMPLE UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF PUBLIC HEALTH

At Temple's College of Public Health, we aren't solely focused on statistics, but instead on what's behind every number.

the fear, the love, and the hope.

Whether it's developing technology that helps quickly diagnose conditions or applying the medical clinic in the kitchen table, we bring different disciplines together to develop solutions that ensure that just because we all statistics, they help one person have a better life.

Engineers are problem solvers.

They're builders and technicians. But mostly, they're clairvoyants. They show us what can be and make it real. They look further into space and deeper into the earth to find solutions that propel us onward into the future. They shed light on what others can't see, taking their work far from the lab in order to leave an indelible mark on tomorrow. Look around you, and you'll see evidence of their industry.

evidence OF Temple

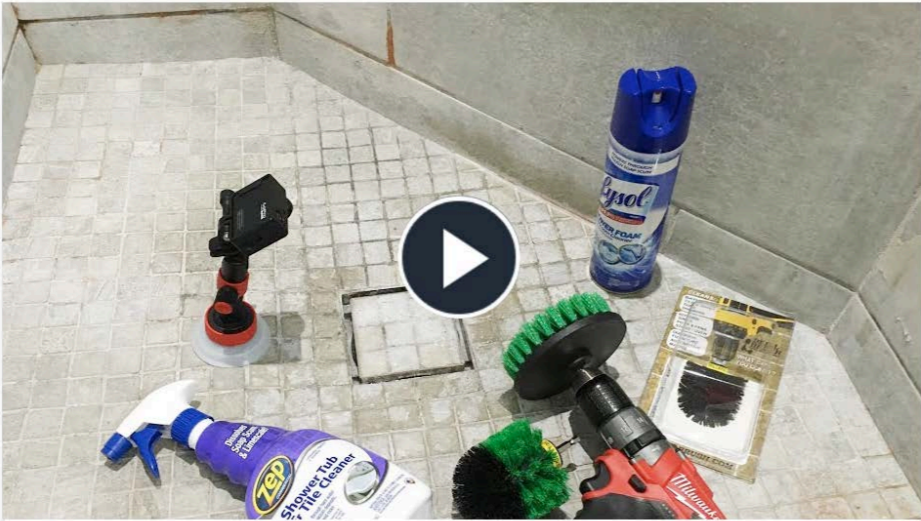

From the view from your top-floor office you enjoy every morning to your evening workout, there's very little in our modern lives that engineers have not designed, developed or at least been a part of. Imagine if we could open up the world of engineering to not only help more people but also enlighten and employ more people in the city of Philadelphia. What could our lives be like?

Temple University College of Engineering is doing just that. From Philadelphia, we seek to solve the world's problems. We identify needs in the community and beyond, working to find the root of issues before developing solutions. We cross disciplines because today's intricacies and technologies demand it, as we craft life's touchpoints to make them easier, more accessible, and often even more fun. And by expanding the facets of what a normal engineering program is, we change the face of who an engineer can be. Meaning that more people than ever will be working to create technologies that one day we'll take for granted.

WHAT DOES

smell like?

Thanks to the work of Dr. Maureen Morrin, Professor of Marketing at the Fox School of Business, we now have a pretty good idea. Dr. Morrin and a collaborative research team found a connection between warm scents and consumer spending in the luxury. That's just one way Fox works across disciplines to reinvent the ways we do business.

#TEMPLEMADE

A billboard advertisement for Temple University. The billboard is mounted on a building and features a photograph of a man in a denim jacket and a hoodie, looking upwards. To the right of the photo is the text 'MADE FOR THE HIGHEST LEVEL OF COMPETITION' in large, bold, red letters. Below this text is the hashtag '#TEMPLEMADE' in smaller, bold, black letters. To the right of the text is the Temple University logo, a red square with a white 'T' inside. The billboard is set against a clear blue sky.
